

INDIA – The New Global Hub for International Students

German students in Jain University inspire a new trend

The count of foreign students in India climb at a faster pace as Indian university's growing international-education efforts fuel a quest for knowledge partnership.

"India is a rapidly developing economy and is fast becoming a recognized source for innovation" says Mr. Axel from Germany, a student of international exchange programme at Jain University, Bangalore.

It may be surprising for some prospective study abroad candidates to know that India is becoming one of the most popular countries in the world for international students.

Education in India has been flourishing in recent years, with respected Universities that feature affordable education, cutting edge curriculum and high quality pedagogy. Increasing numbers of Indian universities are also being recognized worldwide for their innovative programmes. International students can select programmes ranging from short-term international exchange courses to in-depth doctorate level work. These top of the line institutions are located in different parts of the country, making it easy for students to find a university that is just the right fit for their personal aims and interests.

Jain University has shown to be an international university of choice for students coming from abroad. As a relatively young university, JU has reached impressive milestones in different aspects. "This has been accomplished by our ceaseless commitment to academic quality and our spirit of innovation. Having made remarkable gains in attracting stellar students from across 25 countries, we intend to capitalize on this momentum to further enhance our commitment to producing global leaders of the highest intellectual and ethical calibre", said Prof. N V H Krishnan, Registrar, Jain University.

"The programme for which we have international students aboard is the six month international student exchange programme. By visiting their host schools, the students attend lectures and undertake consulting projects". Commenting on the programme that Jain University is offering to the international exchange students, Prof. Krishnan said, "The design of the programme and the projects will enable the students to learn about global issues in fast growing technology environments, equipping them with the insight and practical skills necessary to develop them into managers for the future, capable of commercializing technologies in global contexts."

Ms. Corrina from Germany who is also a student of this exchange programme at Jain University said, "The programme offers us fantastic opportunity to gain a deeper understanding of how leading edge innovation in India is being positioned to meet global needs. It will also give us an invaluable insight into India, its culture and business approaches as well as the chance to network with some of India's future business leaders."

"The learning methodology in India is very versatile and accommodative to one's specific need when compared to Germany. We will find around two hundred students present for a particular lecture in our country which is not the case in India. Students have the opportunity to enjoy individual attention with effective pedagogy at JU due to smaller student count." says Axel.

The power of education in India does not end there. Indian education is more than coursework and studying and can even extend off campus.

"Students who study in this magnificent country can expect meaningful experiences in and out of the classroom. Student life in India has much to offer international students, including distinctive cultural scenes and plentiful campus opportunities" says Axel.

The Indian landscape is distinctive and inspiring, attracting students with unparalleled natural wonders and booming metropolises. With travel destinations in all regions of the country, students who study abroad in India have numerous options to choose from, making it possible for students with all interests to find just the right travel experience during their time in the country.

A combination of academic rigour, fabulous weather and cultural richness in and around the city of Bangalore makes Jain University an attractive choice for any applicant.
