When 21-year-old Ajay Marshall, a mechanical engineering student of Jain University, went to get his hall-ticket for the upcoming examinations, college authorities refused to give it to him on grounds of low attendance. But when he explained that he was busy making a movie and had not bunked classes for the fun of it, he was allowed to sit for the exam.

The movie in question is 'Human Eclipse' for which Ajay was the chief editor and associate director. It is now ready to be screened at international film festivals including the Sundance Film Festival.

Ajay, a resident of Lingarajapuram, was featured in Bangalore Mirror two years back when he made a short film titled 'Boondh' on a paltry budget of Rs 2,000.

"Following the BM report, I was roped in by Swan Productions headed by director Shankar to work on the Human Eclipse project. "Human Eclipse is all about discrimination in society on the basis of caste, creed and religion. It's time for the world to rise above biases and parochial interests. I loved the storyline and the concept of this film as I want to make films to change society's way of thinking," said Ajay.
